Another youth organisation focused on membership is Liberal movement LJY-Netzer.

It has grown by a fifth in the last year, new figures reveal. Almost a year ago, members passed a motion making the boosting of numbers a priority. The movement then came up with special programmes designed to bring in more 12- and 13-year-olds, an age bracket identified as ripe for growth. Programmes included theatre, cinema and bowling trips, and a Shabbat sleepover. "This wasn't accidental; it came from a deliberate decision to go for growth," says LJY's Jordan Helfman. Membership now stands at 313.
